

Over-regulating technology is not the way to make it achieve our ends. We must understand that changes in communications bring changes in relationships -- including business relationships. The burden is on the various communications industries to innovate new business models to leverage emerging technologies, not on the public to guarantee their profitability in the face of an evolving society.